Art fairs to see during Paris Art Week 2026

You may have exhausted London's artistic offerings this week, but as we all know by now, the art calendar waits for no one. As Frieze draws to a close, FLO London turns its attention across the Channel to the fairs unfolding alongside Paris Art Week, and to what this November's Paris Photo has in store (spoiler: did you know 2026 marks the bicentennial of photography?). Whether you've already planned your next trip on the Eurostar or need some convincing, we're here to tell you Art Basel isn't the only fair you should have on your radar…

Menart Fair

#FLODown: Just like AKAA, Menart Fair also prides itself on spotlighting art beyond Western circles. Involving more than one hundred modern and contemporary artists, most of whom are recognised in their respective countries, the fair makes sure to create dialogue between the different cultures of the MENA region. Alongside participating galleries, this year's edition will include multiple roundtable discussions centred on the intersection between art and politics, asking questions such as 'Where is Home?' while also looking at the past and future of Arab art.
